

BIOARCHAEOLOGY IN CROATIA I: HUMAN OSTEOLOGY

Program Description:

This is a three-credit, intensive lab and lecture course that provides an overview of the methods used in biological anthropology for studying human remains as well as the techniques used to develop biological profiles used in forensic case work. In this course, students will intensively study the skeleton from the coronal suture to the distal end of the distal foot phalanges. The course is first and foremost focused on the anatomy and physiology of the human skeleton, with emphasis on evolution, function, growth, and development. Students will learn to identify all the bones in the skeleton, major landmarks of each skeletal element and basic skeletal biology. Additional studies in the estimation of age at death, estimation of sex, pathological recording, and trauma will also occur.
